NOTED FILMMAKER GUILLERMO DEL TORO SIGHTED AT HETFET PROTEST

RUMORS SWIRL AS DEL TORO DENIES AFFILIATION WITH HETFET

New York – April 22, 2008 Despite repeated claims to the contrary, candid photographs taken at the Jacob Javits Center deliver startling evidence that there could, in fact, be a connection between noted writer/director Guillermo del Toro and the so-called grass roots organization called HETFET (Humans for the Ethical Treatment of Faeries, Elves and Trolls) <http://www.hetfet.org>.

When asked about the meeting during the “Hellboy 2: The Golden Army” panel at the New York Comic Convention, del Toro feigned ignorance, saying he was unaware of any gatherings, and if he was seen with these HETFET people, it was sheer coincidence. The accompanying and supposedly untouched photo seems to place del Toro with HETFET supporters, and certain sources say supporting video may also be circulating.

After the panel, del Toro exited quickly, unwilling to take any more questions on the matter. Deflecting all reporters, his publicist claimed the issue was closed. However, one astute observer noticed a telling detail: beneath del Toro's jacket, slightly obscured, was a t-shirt bearing the distinct logo of HETFET and the phrase "Support Troll Markets."

In related news, Elizabeth Moora, a vocal advocate of HETFET, cited del Toro's interest in the underground group as “purely coincidental”.

It's safe to say this case is definitely not closed.
