I am most certainly being followed. I confronted them today. They said... they said that they represent some new psychiatric word that's being built, and are willing to pay me to have patients brought to them.

I told them no. It just doesn't feel right to me. I turned them down, and they gave me a phone number to contact them if I changed my mind.

Later that day, I went to my therapist to talk about my fears, but all he did was ask about my patients, if any of them stuck out in my mind. I do believe I should start looking for another therapist. I do not think John is here to help me.
