

March 16th, 2003

I met with my newest patient today.
An odd case. His name is Adam Livingston.
He was brought in for a severe case of schizophrenia. The odd thing is that he only has a single, consistent hallucination.
An imaginary friend in the form of a giant bear, it appears. I haven't made much headway with him yet, but I have determined that he is quite sensitive when the topic of his friend not being real is brought up.