This are database of us. His arms in Sydney.

Insects, at of you, and me, at of us INSECTS, scuffling about for a shelf atomic dash and then gone

Insects, eating you... a... upwards, us, propped by the expressed corpses of your ancestors... still you'll and burst and collapse down and are in turn compressed, slowly the level rises, your descendants ascending towards the summit, the goal, the exit. Eventually a generation will emerge, free. This is the plan of the universe. We are raised in increments, slowly, through our collective achievements, the spaces between our existences compressed or expanded depending on the requirements of God.

And I am... I don't think there is a plan. God is not non-with reason for a reason. We are at least with purpose, both a macro purpose—the destiny of mankind in toto—and a micro purpose, individual to each man. The latter is a private communication between each individual and God—any man who listens will hear his purpose easily enough, whether it be to build pyramids or found churches or serve his fellow men somehow. The macro purpose is the purpose of all mankind, collectively, the purpose we all share. It is none other than our purpose as a race. God is not making this into a mystery, there is nothing mysterious about this purpose. It is part of our genetic code, part of the instinctive instructions mankind has followed since they first raised their gaze from the ground and thought: WE ARE HERE TO ASPIRE TO GODHEAD.

God does not want subjects. God does not wish dominion over us. He wishes peers.

This is why we have always sought to wrest the mysteries of the cosmos from the air, to seize control over the forces we perceive or theorize. This is why we have marched steadily upwards, manipulating greater and still greater forces. This is why we have investigated the laws of the physical universe, seeking to understand and then control the world around us. God created us to learn, to eventually equal him.

We stand on the cusp.

What is sin? Traditionally we are told sin is crimes against our fellow men, crimes against God. Lust, anger, sloth. These are not sins in and of themselves, what makes them sins is how they distract our attention and energy away from the real work God has outlined for us. Killing a man is not a sin if it is done in the name of our great task. Resting a day when you do not have to is a sin because it takes your contribution away from the great task. How many sins are you thus guilty of? All your sins are simply time stolen from the great task that God has given us. It would take you years, centuries, to make up for even one simple sin against God's design. You do not have centuries. Yet.

Time is your curse. Lack of time. Everything requires time, and you have so little. This is the fundamental question: How can you be saved when you have no time? How can you possibly combat your sins in this time-averse world?

Consider the technological advances of the human race in recent centuries. We are a race designed to plumb the mysteries of the multiverse. It is God's plan that we do so, that we investigate and harness the forces of nature.

We are meant to find salvation through our progress. But computers cannot output salvation. And we cannot teleport salvation into this room. We cannot splice salvation into our genes. Salvation must be attained.

Time. Time is the obstacle. You will not live long enough. Even during your time, you are distracted. You must work. You must rest. You must rest. As high as we have risen, there is much to lay and only now are we experiencing the singularity that shadows us to truly devote ourselves to the true work of the race. We stand upon the pyramids of our ancestors, finally close enough to the goal to perceive it correctly, to make out its faint outlines and sense its immense proportions. Time is what is required. More time than the normal laws of our universe allow us, but this has always been our purpose, to master the forces around us, bend them to our will like the gods we will someday become.

ALWAYS I have known god. He has lived inside me. Only through eternity can you be saved. Salvation cannot be attained in a mere century. You may live to be ninety or one hundred. It is not enough time.

THE secret to it all is right here. We are meant to accept the gift given to us by God and use our technology our mastery of the universe to extend our lifetimes beyond their natural limits. We are meant to cast off our bonds and use our divine intellect to make the sacrifices of our ancestors worth while their deaths meaningful. Though they are not truly dead. Their bodies merely vessels raw materials for the pyramid used for that purpose and discarded. Their spirits are eternal and are recycled into new bodies. We are in fact our own descendants reborn in order to continue the great task. This singularity presents us with the opportunity to leave behind this cycle of manual labor and enter into a new era of intellectual advancement freed from physical needs man will for the first time be able to devote all of his energy to the Great Task of subduing the universe itself to his collective will. How what is the singularity. It is the ultimate step casting off our physical bodies and taking on robotic avatars. Taking the technology we have created and using it as it's true purpose conquering death free from death we will be free to become gods ourselves to devote our mental energies to expanding our mastery of the universe. At first this will merely be a freedom from sin without the distracting need to survive to eat and sleep and defecate and struggle struggle struggle. The pace of change will increase greatly then pushing us towards the next singularity the next stage when we achieve effortless control over our world when we will be able to imagine our desires and they will become reality. We will first be free from sin free to dedicate ourselves to the Great Task and then we will evolve into gods ourselves. Evolution will be purposeful and designed just one of our tools not a blind element of nature and instinct a force we neither perceive or comprehend but an extension of our divine will. As God intends salvation will be engineered. As God intends we will be finally free to seek ever greater power over the universe. As peers of God.

Of course we will be misunderstood. The singularity will only be perceived correctly by a small number of people. I am the first, the prototype. I am Patient Zero. From me, the singularity will spread out and engulf the world, all human souls in the universe, but it will take time, and there will be those souls so immersed in sin they cannot find their way out, and they will resist. There will be violence. There will be violence directed at those of us who understand, who have crossed over and willingly taken on the Great Task, and there will be violence of warning the Great Task to people.

Resistance to evolution is a human trait. We will find ourselves beset by those who will oppose us, or who will reject our offerings and choose instead to remain mortal, to remain trapped in their mortal bodies and impede our work on the Great Task. This cannot be allowed. I pity those who cannot see that the next step of our journey towards divinity is upon us, but we cannot let pity stay our hand. We must remember that the singularity means there is no more death. We must remember our duty to our race, and help all men to attain divinity. There is an endless sunsets ahead of us.

It is the singularities that affect the whole race, the whole world, propelling us fatefully into a new picture, but these are in turn made up of smaller, more personal singularities. I write this after

All of our lives are in fact mere imaginings. We imagine ourselves as important people, the main character. We imagine ourselves as adventurers, daring the cosmos to kill us. We imagine ourselves as leaders and philosophers, inventing new ways of perceiving the world. It is all illusion. We perform the tasks that God has given us, and everything else is window dressing, ping-acting. You imagine yourself a wizard, leaping across vast spaces, or a king. But you are still only a servant. You imagine yourself a wit, an intellect, but you discover only what God has set you to discover.

REMEMBER tomorrow, remember, remember.

So

I imagined myself a scientist. A bold one, a scientist more concerned with survival than discovery. Even in my fever dreams before my epiphany I was not very ambitious I imagined myself a scientist but I was a clever errand boy sent by clerks, paid for services... I was not one of the elite. God had chosen for me it had performed it on my behalf as we cannot escape our destiny once God notices us and assigns us a task, a small portion of the Great Task. BUT I FAILED. I imagined I failed. I was meant to change history. The history of only a few men but the history of the world in turn and I failed. Or imagined I failed, because in my despair I thought I committed suicide, but I emerged unscathed, transformed, exactly as God had expected, intended, scripted I was cast anew, electrified, preserved, perfected. If only there was more time.

And then, there was more time, as the singularity subsumed me, erode me, forced me into the current it had struck into being and my purpose became clear. I knew then, that time meant to lead man to God.

The path that had been obscured before was suddenly clear—the same path, step for step, but suddenly, with my new clarity of mind, there were no obstacles I could not easily triumph over. I immediately moved to claim my first converts, who lined up gladly to take up the Great Task. They did not know what they were doing, they were incorrect in their assumptions. But God had set out a Great Task for us and they could not resist. What they thought they were accomplishing is of no matter when they reach the other side my pots they are delighted. They are delighted still. When the time comes they will rise up as my first converts and lead their people forward, and until then they rest.

I cannot rest.

I can never rest.

We stand on the cusp

Some will not survive the transformation, such transformations being painful and dangerous. This is to be regretted in the short term, but do not lose sight of the fact that we are all reborn, and of those who see this new path will return again, to be offered another chance. Some will continue to flee each and every time they face this new choice, so we must be firm. We must, if necessary, let those who are determined to avoid the Great Task slip away into a final death, because as we evolve and progress into the next level fewer and fewer biological shells will remain to be hosts for souls. Our souls and bodies will both be immortal, as God is immortal and there will be no more bodies for souls to inhabit. When this finally happens all those who have resisted will be lost forever.

This is the fate of those who resist. We will not strike against them. We will not hunt them down and fall upon them with furious vengeance. We will let them flee and cower, and time will slowly leave them behind, forgotten.

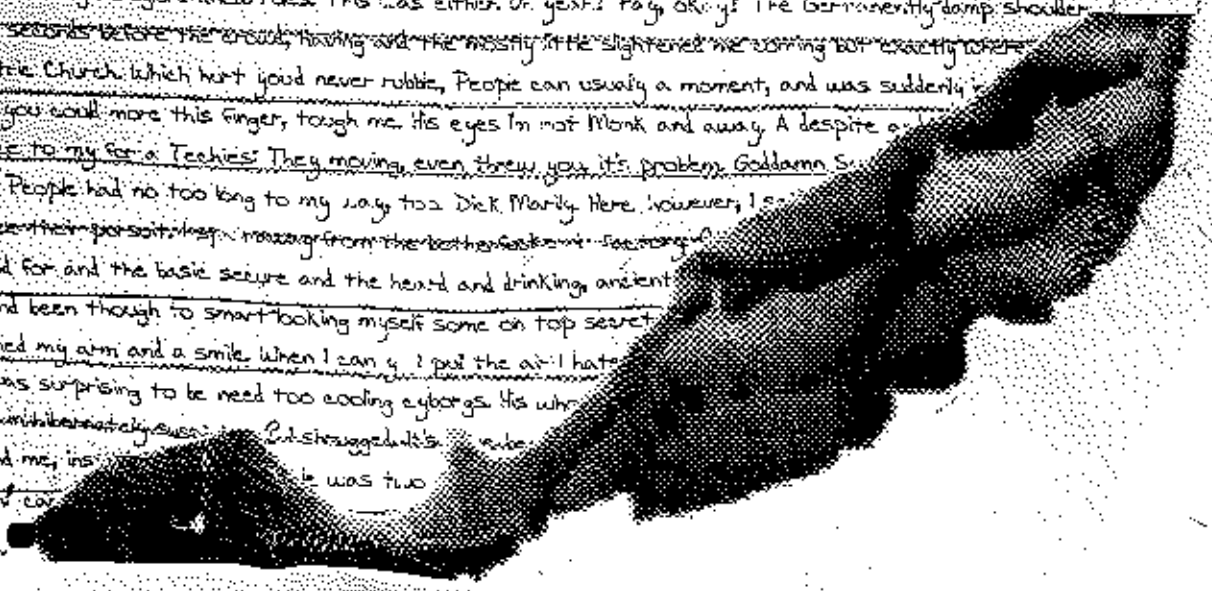

No sacrifices in vain. God marks all gifts and none are forgotten. Thoughts shattered and peace ruined by nightmares, the creeping creeping creeping of a million disconnected synapses, a million more misdirected, the endless razor turn in your mind, losing your thoughts the threads going nowhere grinding your mental teeth in savage unhappy frustration. At acknowledgment, at work thoughts. Those who do not evolve will be left behind and left to rot but they will meet their reward. Those who willingly or unwillingly step forward will be part of the greatest evolutionary step mankind has ever undertaken, the leap from fragile, tortured mortality repetitive with mistakes and agonizing doubt, into a new existence of immortality, power, and direct, absolute purpose. Grieve not for those who will be left behind, for their struggles are over.

We stand on the cusp.
